OPM Marks 60 Days of Historic Action and Reform

Washington, D.C. — In the first 60 days of the Trump Administration, the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has led a sweeping transformation of the federal workforce.

“We’ve delivered bold action in record time—reining in bureaucracy, restoring accountability, and setting the tone for a new era of efficiency in government,” Acting Director Chuck Ezell said. “And we’re just getting started.”

Key milestones from OPM’s first 60 days include:

- Executed the government-wide Deferred Resignation Program, resulting in approximately 75,000 resignations and retirements in just two weeks, saving taxpayers millions.
- Led the government-wide return to in-person work initiative, including comprehensive updates to every agency’s telework policy.
- Helped oversee the restructuring of nearly every major federal agency, aligning operations with the Trump Administration’s key priorities.
- Helped oversee a government-wide hiring freeze to control costs and enhance accountability.
- Ended wasteful programs and policies promoting divisive DEI and gender ideology across the federal government.
- Issued new performance plans for the Senior Executive Service (SES) corps, and led a government-wide reorganization of the SES.
- Reinvigorated the Chief Human Capital Officers Council, now convening multiple times per week to ensure government-wide alignment on key administration priorities.
- Issued a record number of guidance documents (nearly 40) implementing President Trump’s personnel policies.

OPM is committed to continuing this pace of reform—streamlining operations, restoring merit, and ensuring that the federal government works for the American people.
