Scott Kupor Sworn in as OPM Director

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Today, Scott Kupor was sworn in as Director of the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM). With decades of leadership experience in the private sector, Kupor brings a results-driven approach to strengthening the federal workforce and ensuring government services meet the highest standards of excellence for the American people.

“I am honored by the Senate’s confirmation and grateful to President Trump for entrusting me with this opportunity to serve,” Director Kupor said. “The federal workforce is the backbone of our government’s ability to deliver for the American people. My commitment is to empower these dedicated public servants with the tools, systems, and leadership they deserve, building a high-performing, accountable, and mission-driven workforce that upholds the trust of every taxpayer.

“I will prioritize President Trump’s America-first agenda by focusing on a smart stewardship of taxpayer resources, fostering a workplace culture that rewards innovation and performance, and ensuring federal agencies are equipped to serve Americans with efficiency and integrity,” Kupor continued. “Throughout my career, I have worked to champion organizational excellence. As Director of OPM, I will apply these experiences to modernize how the federal government attracts, develops, and retains top talent.”
